

Our belief and purpose:

Most of the great performers of the classical music world were already performing at a high level when they were young. We have all seen children who shows great musical talent at a young age. These people have one thing in common; they have a suitable environment in which to learn music. There are two kinds of ideal environments: there is a relative in the family who is a musician, or the family supports the child to learn music and has access a good music teacher. No matter if their family is musical or not, the student gets important support and guidance from a good teacher. There are no shortcuts to learn music but there are ways to slow your learning through receiving wrong information. The Guidance Academy of Music has sourced many good musicians and master pedagogues who can share their knowledge to students and provide high quality teaching standards, allowing the young musical child the chance to stand on the shoulder of the giants, so to speak.

Our goals:

To enjoy music is not unlike enjoying a beautiful view, it is an ability we all possess. Music is a language which everyone can learn. For children who started to lean music at a young age, music is their native language.

We believe that for any music student, amateur or professional, it is valuable to see how the great musical masters are thinking, how they practice and where their inspiration comes from. These insights can leave a lasting impression, helping to guide a student's musical development for years to come. Our goal is to make musical education more accessible and help to transmit the ideas and teachings of great professors to students of all musical levels and backgrounds. Eventually, the student will train to be their own teacher; a skill which will serve them for their whole life.

We understand that everyone comes from a different family with different values and ideas on child education. Our goal is to provide the same education and opportunities to a child who was not born in a musical family and environment to the child who was. In turn, everybody will be able learn and enjoy music more, allowing students to nurture their talent to its full potential.

My story:

I was born in to a musical family. My father plays violin and my brother has perfect pitch. I wasn't born with perfect pitch but with this environment in which I learned to have perfect pitch when I was five years old. Now I am a professional horn player in the Estonian National Symphony Orchestra. One of my Japanese colleagues has perfect pitch. After she explained to me how she was educated as a child in Japan to have perfect pitch through the system of Ichoinkai school, I realised the education I had when I was young was very similar to it. I wish to share this education in a more accessible way so that everyone may benefit, not only those who were lucky enough to have it as a child.

How we teach:

Our teaching approach consists of two components, one online and the other offline.

The advantage with our online component is that it is an inexpensive way to overcome the obstacle of location. This way we are able to provide online public lessons (teacher seminars, explanation of fundamental elements etc), in order for students to have access to good teachers. We will also both group and individual online lessons. One on one classes online are suitable to help solve specific problems for the individual student and to focus the teaching with high efficiency. It can help a student to have those crucial break-through moments that will accelerate their technical development. The group lessons enable students to share the lesson costs and it provides an opportunity to learn from one another. In addition, we can also start cooperation between our performers working with local teachers who are willing to develop their own teaching level. Through our online platform they can share experiences and cooperate in their teaching activities.

Offline, we work to arrange for our teachers to visit different cities in China to give concerts and masterclasses. For the ones just starting to learn music, we will work with a team of music educators from Finland who are trained in Finnish music education system. This specialised team provide high level classes introducing music for beginners.

Many good musicians has said that “the stage is the place where you really learn”. All the students who study with the Guidance Academy of Music will work with their teacher to prepare a programme for concerts at school and for the student's families. By watching a recording the concert, the instrumental teacher can give advice to the students how to improve for the next performance.

Many parents do not consider music theory and solfeggio as important academic subjects for music students, however it is essential for good musicians to have this important knowledge which is in fact easy to learn. These skills involve improvising accompaniment and playing music by ear. They encourage children to enjoy music together with their friends.

Our qualified instrumental teachers primarily teach in English, however there are many common musical terms in other European languages such as Italian, German and French. We will provide English lesson to students to learn how to communicate with musical terms in English. The student will be able to make basic daily communication and to communicate in English with our music masters with no difficulty. They will also be able to participate in chamber music classes with foreigners in English alongside other international musicians.

Development structure:

Our current focus is giving online masterclasses. In the future we plan to organise live masterclasses in person. We will establish a certified academy which will be qualified to award diplomas to our students.

Lessons:

1. Public masterclasses, individual and group lessons.
2. Concerts.
3. Practical solfeggio and basic music theory.
4. Practical English for musicians.

Syllabus:

Guidance Academy of Music will provide music education with the aim of delivering concepts of music, rhythm, intonation, promoting musical awareness for musicians and music lovers, We want to nurture the path of a student's musical life so that whilst it will be guided firstly by us, eventually they will guide themselves. No matter if a student wants to be a professional or amateur musician, after taking our courses they will be able to enjoy music more.

I have already established a plan for the students who are living in China and who want to go abroad to study music.

They will have practical solfeggio lesson which will also introduce music theory, practical English for music students, and lessons of their major instrument.

In solfeggio lesson they can start from level 0 and will be able to easily identify different pitches, intervals, basic knowledge of chords and basic rhythms at the end of one year of study.

The practical English course will allow them to make simple conversation in daily life as well as to understand most conversational exchange in music lessons.

In the major instrumental lessons, the teachers will decide what to teach for each individual student. All our teachers are highly capable and have extensive teaching and performing experience. In most cases, students lack basic training such as scales, however this varies depending on the individual student.

After undertaking our courses for 1 year or more, students will have little to no difficulties in fulfilling their goal of studying music abroad in foreign academies and conservatories. We wish to guide them on their ideal musical path.

Accommodating Different Goals

Students can have different goals for studying music. We have created a system that is tailored to each different student's needs. The teaching syllabus can be discussed between students and their teachers. Students will have to opportunity to outline their goals and our teachers will help establish a suitable curriculum to meet them.

Please note there are some other teachers and other masters are interested, their photos are not here yet.

How we Control the Results

During their studies with us, students will give a number of small concerts in the city where they live as well as online. The major teacher will listen to the recordings and give feedback.

The exam concert will be arranged for each student by us after they have studied solfeggio, music theory and practical English for musicians.

A jury consisting of three to five teachers for each student will watch their recordings of the live concerts.

The exam program will be decided by students with guidance of their teacher and approved by the jury.

The students will give a concert which welcomes public audiences, including a friendly introduction in English of each piece the student will play.

There will be one exam for the practical solfeggio and music theory studies in two parts. The oral component tests the student for sight-reading melodies precisely in tune, in tempo and in accurate rhythm. For the written part, the student will be dictating notes and chords of what they hear, including naming notes, intervals and chords.

The Certificates

After the exam concert, the students will be awarded a certificate of practical solfeggio and theory, a certificate of practical English and a certificate of (Number of concerts are given) with Guidance Academy of Music.

Youth Department

We will also develop a youth department, cooperating with a team of experts of Finnish Music Education for young people.
